The Noahide Covenant Study with Jack Love in Memory of Arthur Aryeh Seagull July 20, 2022 at 1:30 p.m.

Congregation Kehillat Israel, in person and on Zoom Jews have 613 mitzvot to follow, but Aryeh was fond of telling non-Jews that they could "always get into Jewish heaven" if they couldn't measure up to the strict standards of another faith tradition, because they only had to follow the seven laws that apply to the children of Noah.

We are fortunate that Aryeh's dear friend, Jacob (Jack) Love, Ph.D., who taught Adult Education classes at KI for over 20 years, will be present to lead us in a study of the history and Talmudic arguments around this list.

Rabbi Kaufman will share a reading to mark the transition out of the shloshim, the first 30 day period of intense mourning.

Please join us in person or remotely for this fitting tribute to a man who loved historical religious detail and Jewish learning. Zoom link is posted in body of NL email and in weekly announcements.

From the Desk of Rabbi Matthew

As we celebrate Independence Day on July 4th, I would like to take a moment to reflect on the power that American civil religion plays in our lives. One of the first Reconstructionist publications, The Faith of America, recognized in this holiday an important opportunity to ritually rededicate ourselves as American Jews to the American Idea.

American Jewish philosopher Horace Kallen wrote that the religion of the American Idea (a phrase he adopted from Unitarian abolitionist Theodore Parker) is expressed through a functioning democracy. "For the communicants of the democratic faith, this is the religion of religions, the common faith in the way of life which keeps impartial peace among them all and assures to each its liberty on equal terms with the others," Kallen wrote. "It is the one way in which each, although maintaining its unique and singular individuality, although cherishing its incommensurable difference, can yet live together with the others in such wise that it can grow in liberty and safety more certainly than if it sought to exist solo." Democratic cooperation requires a faith commitment that we can and must work together. In these times when we are seeing escalating assaults on the democratic faith by those who wish to quash the democratic process, it is important to rearticulate this faith in a public fashion.

The Declaration of Independence makes clear what the American Idea signifies. It's claim that "all men are created equal" does not employ the word "equal" in the sense of "homogeneous," Kallen argued. Rather, it means "equal as different; it affirms the parity of the different; it recognizes that their equality does not abolish their diverse natures but preserves and liberates them." As American Jews, our commitment to the American Idea constitutes an affirmation of the value of Jewish difference together with other ethnoracial and faith group differences. Through democratic cooperation, we contribute to each other's flourishing. It is a simple but powerful idea, and one that we must not allow this nation to forget.

I return to work at KI on August 6th. I look forward to seeing you then!

Presidents Column

Kehillat Israel lost one of its founders recently. Art Seagull was a person who had a profound impact on our tradition in the course of his long involvement with the synagogue. He is missed and will be missed by many. While at the cemetery for his interment I fell into conversation with two of our fellow congregants, both of whom have been members for much longer than I, so over 20 years, and in one case much longer than that. At one point we remarked upon the graves of two people, a married couple, situated nearby. I recognized them from our reading the names of the deceased during our Yizkor service. I assumed that my companions, given their longer history at KI, would remember them. In fact, they did not; they too knew the names from Yizkor

It occurred to me while driving home that this deceased couple, who must have been KI members and participated in their time in the life of the congregation, were on the cusp of being forgotten for their particular activities and contributions to the life and the tradition of Kehillat Israel today. And yet, though absent now, they remain with us, woven into that tradition they helped to create.

I think each of us who have made a commitment to KI are on similar path. No matter the size or the kind of commitment, we are helping to build and further our special KI tradition. And ultimately, each of us has a place within that tradition.

Great Books

The next KI Great Books meeting will be Zoom only on Monday, 18 July, at 2:00 PM. The Zoom link will be emailed. At our last, 27 June, session, we discussed our next text and the consensus was to move to the Best American Short Stories 2015, edited by T.C. Boyle (and Heidi Pitlor), which got very favorable reviews from Amazon readers. The book is available at Amazon in paperback, and can arrive in a very short time. As is customary, we will start with the opening two stories: "The Siege at Whale Cay," by Megan Mayhew Bergman and "Fingerprints," by Justin Bigos. If you would like to be the discussion-starter, please let me know. Stay well and Happy 4th. Alan Posner
